I was hoping for a new series that I could enjoy. Unfortunately, while the author shows some promise with the actual mystery involved, the personalities of her characters were unsympathetic, trite, forced, and more than slightly unbelievable. Molly, a widow for barely a year and after many years of a happy marriage, is not only sleeping with a new man but yearns for a life where she doesn't have to answer to anyone. Most widows that I have known are horribly grief-stricken at this point - but not Molly! By the end of the book, she has two men on her string. The author throws in a weird scene where Molly drinks a bottle of her late husband's favorite beer... and somehow connects to his memory. This is kind of creepy considering how little she otherwise thinks of him. Molly's sons are unhappy with her hooking up with a new guy (who can blame them considering she obviously did so with her husband in the grave for less than a year.) Does she understand? No, she just brushes off their concerns and goes her own way. Not the type of mother I had nor the type I am. Weird references to her Judaism are thrown in - they don't progress the story but are there presumably to let us know that she is, in fact, Jewish. I have crocheted for almost thirty years - this book does not appear to have been written by someone who crochets, but instead by someone looking for a story "hook" to get crocheters to buy her book. The scenes involving crochet sound like they were downloaded from instructions on the internet. Crocheting is not difficult to learn and yet this author makes it sound very hard.
